

Lars D. H. Hedbor,

Novelist of the American Revolution

What made the American Colonists turn their back on their King, and fight for independence? How were they different from us—and how were their hopes and fears familiar to our own hearts?

These are the sorts of questions that Hedbor thinks are important to ask in examining the American Revolution, and in the pages of my novels, he suggests some possible answers.

His first novel, The Prize, was published in 2011, followed by The Light in 2013, and The Smoke, The Declaration, and The Break in 2014;

The Wind was published in 2015, and The Darkness in 2016.

He's also written extensively about this era for the Journal of the American Revolution, and has appeared as a featured guest on an Emmy-nominated Discovery Network program, The American Revolution, which premiered nationally on the American Heroes Channel in late 2014. He has also appeared as a series expert on America: Fact vs. Fiction for Discovery Networks, and will be a panelist at the Historical Novel Society's 2017 North American Conference.

He is an amateur historian, linguist, brewer, fiddler, astronomer, and baker. Professionally, he is a technologist, marketer, writer, and father. His love of history drives him to share the excitement of understanding the events of long ago, and how those events touch us still today.
